Sacre Noir unleash their second single from the 'Sinking Into Darkness' LP with another gritty slice of electronica in the form of 'Rue Crimée'.

"toys with ethereal soundscapes, industrial tones that could easily capture the imagination of anyone who has that touch of darkness in them"

The single is accompanied by a video produced by Stuart Millar of Aristotle Events Filming in collaboration with the band. The dark and cinematic video continues Sacre Noir's collaboration with Erin Culley Make-Up Artist and tells the further story of the characters established in the video for previous single 'She Can't Take It'.

Filmed on location in Leith and inspired by the urban landscapes of Paris, 'Rue Crimée' addresses the tensions and insecurities of our time. Where the first video and single provided a glimpse of a dark and strange underworld, this second looks further through the frame and explores the characters' manic and chaotic environment.

"the electronic mash-up of Rue Crimée which couples a throbbing bass with nerve-jangling effects, feedback and a steady drum pattern - all to great effect."
